"jaw breaking" names to the higher schools and colleger. The study will give them: an added zeal in the other studies of the ny. The colleges of the country are forced to give more and more time to this branch of aclence and great strides are being made to the study of Natural History. Let us, in the future, reject that which is worn out and adopt that which is of ad-

ventere to ourselves and our charges.

Miss Fannis P. Hardy opened the discussion and said that if she had her way she would put Natural History into the lower gradet and leave Natural Science for the higher grades. "What we see in the kindergarten and my own experience teaches me that the study of Natural History is best taught in the lowest grades There are great bindrances in the way of the study. If the work is made compulsory the teacher is liable to take up wrong methods and again there is a great lack of proper text books on the subject." Miss Hardy spoke of a practical experience which she had passed through the pass two weeks with a class in zoology of fiften boys in the Brewer schools, above study. The most practical method would seem to be to take up the study in the form of teading lessons, as the unhalor shrinks at once from learning from a text book to recite from memory. In the High Schools, if the study is taught there, teach by s thorough study of the animals themselves and not from text books alone. Don't teach the Latin names as they are change ing every year. Prof. Harvey, who was to follow, was not present and as Mr. Crawford, who wo: aiso to speak on the subject was not on hand, Miss Elia Abbott, of the Brewer Bigh School, spoke from a practical experience in teaching zoology in the school. She would recommend the study to trachers who are not specialists perhaps but would like to engage and hold the

of transition."

There is a medium between what a worthy old gentleman calls "whichn about like a weathercock" and remaining rigidly in one rut of belief. Most of us know instances of men who coance bring themselves to say anything which would contradict what they uttered last week or last year.

A certain Irishman once doclared that he had owned a horse which was lifteen feet high. A few days after he referred to the same animal as being fitteen hands.

high.
"But," said a lictency, "you gave it the other day as fifteen feet."
"Did I, thin?" said Patrick, "Well, I'll stick to it. He was fifteen feet high." -Youth's Companion,
